Mediation: from theoretical concepts to evaluation practices within the migration context

Concept Note

Background

Contributing to ALTE's mission of 'Maximising Impact', the LAMI group was formed in Salamanca in 2002 with the aim of giving a platform for language testers to support their attempts to ensure that issues of test fairness within the migration context were addressed. LAMI means Language Assessment for Migration and Integration; it is a Special Interest Group that has been central to the discussion ALTE has been engaged in regarding the growing prominence of language testing in European migration policy.

Objectives

Reflecting on mediation has become a key duty for policymakers, language educators and language testers. It requires being aware of to what extent mediation is part of our daily life, in building bridges, constructing meanings, creating space for communicating and allowing conditions for sharing. Mediation also appears to be a growing and crucial issue in social and cultural processes: supporting integration, sustaining diversity, ensuring respect for human rights, and preserving plurilingualism are values strictly connected to the multiple perspectives of the term, particularly with regard to the migration context. The LAMI forum aims to address these values, rethinking the role of mediation within environments related to language learning and language testing for migrants.

The first session will introduce the concept of mediation according to the Council of Europe's perspective, from the CEFR and its Companion Volume. Subsequently, the concept will be related both to European and local scenarios: critical reflections concerning the misuse of mediation will be presented with an overview of language requirements for migrants. Then, the role of mediation in testing Spanish language creates the link from the first to the second session.

The second session then aims to offer other concrete examples of mediation in practice as applied to different learner profiles (low-literate users, children and adult migrants) and different kinds of assessments (diagnostic, formative and standardised exams).

Finally, the need to monitor mediation in practice will be the core of the last session, based on the results of two case studies conducted at national level. A round table will close the forum, with a panel discussion preceding the closing remarks.
